Volume 8, Number 2, July – December 2021

Editor's Note

This issue of Rangsit Journal of Social Science and Humanity (RJSH) presents you with eight articles from various disciplines. Among them, several articles are related to the ASEAN countries. We hope that the RJSH will have more articles from ASEAN countries. Apart from that, this issue also includes two creative research composition articles, an article of art creation, and an article of linguistic landscape.

In the first article by Niña Fatimah D. Borbon, the author studied relationship between time management, learning motivation and academic performance of the dental students in a dentistry college in the Philippines. This study found that, task prioritization was the dominant time management skill of the dental clinicians. In addition, the appreciation of value of the course was their highest learning motivation.

The second article brings us to Myanmar. Hnin Set Win and Sasiphattra Siriwato found that there were some difficult situations for the political candidates in the 2020 general election. However, the authors found that the 2020 general election was freer and fairer than the 2015 general election.

The third article is about the creative research composition of “King Bhumibol and his Phenomenal Music Legacy for Jazz Orchestra”. Palangpon Songpaiboon, Weerachat Premananda and Den Euprasert composed a four-movement jazz orchestral suite to honor King Bhumibol. It expresses the grateful moments and love from people.

Next, the article by Sirarat Sukchai and Weerachat Premananda is about the creative research composition of the Siamese Mass for the Roman Catholic Liturgy. It was composed in Latin, for choir, solo and piano accompaniment.

In the fifth article, Piyarat Pipattarasakul studied the linguistic landscape of the Bangkok Railway Station, known as Hua Lamphong Railway Station. The author found that the 314 signs were used for providing general information, giving direction, advertising, and so on. Thai and seven foreign languages were found. It reflects multilingualism and globalization.

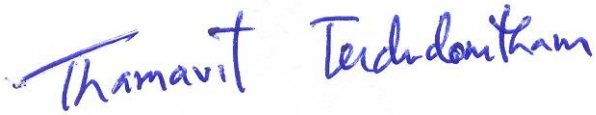

The sixth article is from Gomesh Karnchanapayap who studied the creation of physical art object through virtual reality. The author found that virtual reality could be used to deliver a satisfying art-viewing experience to audiences.

In the seventh article, Pearpilai Jutasompakorn, Chu Yeong Lim, and Seck Tan studied migratory factors for accountancy students within the ASEAN countries. The authors found that the opportunity to acquire learning exposure was an important migratory factor, particularly for Singapore students. However, for non-Singapore students, the economic growth of the destination country was an important migratory driver.

Last but not least, the article by Kok-Pin Lim, Kim-Leng Goh and Chin-Sieng Chong is about the effects of global commodity prices on ASEAN-5 stock markets. The authors found that global commodity price movements had effects on the returns of ASEAN-5 stock markets, and the spillover effects were generally positive.
